EDITORIAL :

"Reputation, reputation, reputation! O, I have lost my reputation! I have lost the immortal part of myself, and what remains is bestial."

— "Othello" by Shakespeare (Cassio, Act II, Scene III)

As we move on another dynamic quarter, we have been contemplating the essence of our department, the flow of ideas, the spark of teamwork, and the quiet determination that propels us forward. It's a privilege to see how this coterie meets new challenges while remaining anchored in our collective pursuit of knowledge. The "English Department" is a cornerstone of our college, a place where words weave different times and cultures. The space where we indulge into the rich diversity of literature, ranging from the ageless works of Shakespeare to contemporary authors, all while enhancing our own writing skills. Our faculty sparks curiosity, our students bring texts to life, and collectively, we advocate for the transformative power of language to provoke thought, uplift spirits, and create connections. We are grateful that the English department of Sibsagar Girls' College has provided such a wonderful opportunity to showcase our unique talents through this newsletter. It offers a judgment-free space where no one should feel inferior to others. The title itself, ENVISION, reminds us of the power of vision, of looking beyond the present moment and shaping ideas into words, and words into meaning. Each article, poem, reflection, and report here is a testimony to the vibrant energy of our department and the brilliance of our students.

Being editors has been a journey of learning and self-discovery. At times, we felt a sense of doubt, wondering whether we could create a newsletter as remarkable as the ones before us. But, the final product is the hard work and effort, carried forward by the 4th semester students. We extend our heartfelt gratitude to everyone who shared their hidden talents and contributed to the success of this endeavor. With immense pride, we now present the latest edition of ENVISION, Volume V, the newsletter of the English Department Society, Sibsagar Girls' College, for the academic year 2024-2025. Within these pages, we explore significant themes that invite reflection and light, while also capturing the vibrant events, activities and achievements that filled our department with enthusiasm and creativity.

As we hand over this newsletter to our readers, we know it may carry imperfections. Yet, even a piece of broken glass catches the light and reflects countless colours. In the same way, every page of this work, flawed or not, holds a certain beauty that shines through.

PRINCIPAL'S MESSAGE :

As the title of the newsletter suggests, 'Envision' is the wish to see what is in store for us, imagine or expect something to happen. And of course, we wish to see something good happening to us.

In this fast-paced world of today, we tend to turn a blind eye to the tiny, little, snippets of happiness that comes in the form of books. The good old habit of reading is crucial not only for knowledge acquisition and cognitive development, but also for personal growth. It broadens our horizons and perspectives, enhances critical thinking, and improves communication skills too. Regular reading also boosts memory, concentration, and analytical skills, contributing to overall intellectual enrichment. Through reading, apart from gaining new insights we can stay updated on various subjects. In this digital age, we have become accustomed to reading online content so much so that we often seem to forget the joy of actually holding a book and the alluring smell of the pages! But then, whatever the format – reading must go on.

It is only befitting that this edition of 'Envision' focuses on the beautiful habit of reading, especially when the government of the state declares 2025 as the 'Year of Reading'.

We are sure, reading will stand the test of time, and continue to be a 'in' thing for the young generation. Let's not let reading be a dying art!

-Dr. Profim Sharma

Principal, Sibsagar Girls' College

HOD'S MESSAGE :

'Envision— More Than a Newsletter'

Dear all,

Warm greetings!

I'm delighted to share a few thoughts on Envision, our Department of English Newsletter-though calling it just a newsletter doesn't quite do it justice.

Envision is, in every sense, a space for expression. It is a reflection of who we are-not only as students and teachers of literature, language, and ideas, but as individuals with stories, voices, and visions worth sharing. It offers a space to create, to be heard, and to connect. Through Envision, we can give and gain maximum exposure for ourselves, where every contribution finds its place, and nothing meaningful slips away unrecorded.

This platform allows students to step beyond the classroom and into the larger conversation-through poems, reflections, short stories, essays, artwork, or even simple observations that reveal the world through their eyes. It gives teachers the space to share insights, engage with students creatively, and celebrate the small victories that often go unrecorded.

We must begin to see Envision not as a routine publication but as a collective mirror-capturing the intellectual and creative spirit of our department. In a time when expression is as crucial as understanding, Envision becomes a kind of stage where thoughts take shape and voices find their strength.

A special word of thanks to our editorial team, who work with quiet dedication to bring all these diverse pieces together. Their role is not merely technical—it is creative, thoughtful, and deeply appreciated. Without their effort, this platform would not exist in the meaningful way it does.

So here's an open invitation: contribute, explore, express. Let Envision be your space-not just to inform, but to inspire.

Warm regards,

Shiva Prasad Mili

Head of the Department, English

A REFLECTION :

A Reflection From ink to screen: The Shift In Reading

Habits

There was a time when the rustle of turning pages and the scent of old paper were part of daily life. Books weren't just read, they were lived. But today, we scroll more than we read, swipe more than we turn.

As a child, during vacations or after long academic sessions, I would sit with my storybooks and dive into the magical world they offered. Those pages transported me into castles, forests and distant lands, where imagination roamed free and time seems to slow down.

Reading wasn't just a habit, it was an escape, a joy and a silent companion.

Reading and scrolling may both involve words, but they are worlds apart in experience. When we read a book, we slow down, absorb and reflect.

A book asks for our time, attention and emotional involvement. In contrast, scrolling through digital content is often passive and fragmented.

Books allow us to live multiple lives through characters, while scrolling often leaves us distracted, jumping from one thing to the next without pause.

In a world where everything moves fast, let's not allow the habit of reading become just a memory wrapped in nostalgia. Choosing to sit with a book is a quite act of resistance- a way to slow down, imagine, reflect and reconnect with ourselves. We don't need to abandon the digital, but we can make space once again for the written pages, for stories that linger and words that shape us. Books may gather dust on our shelves, but their magic still waits, patiently for our return.

"What can stop the determined heart and resolved will of man?"

the book Frankenstein)

AITAMA

Altama, it's an emotion of comfort,
The beauty that forever I will adore.
She is my grandma, my haven of gentle care,
Where warmth and love entwine.
When I call her 'Altama',
It gives me the pleasure of having a comfort place.
With her by my side, life is serene.
I'm her tiny 'Jaanjoni',
We laugh, we fight, yet love remains,
And she is my happy place.
Suddenly, I was empty,
My heart felt hollow.
Silence screamed her name,
It felt empty and still.
Her absence echoed loudly,
She was nowhere to be found.
There was only allience,
The silence was deafening.
The truth hit me like a wave: she was gone.
Her gentle hands on my head, Now a fading memory.
The comforting touch, lost to me.
In this selfish world, her love shone so true,
A purity that I may never find anew.
I deeply missed her warm smile and comforting presence.
This loss feels eternal,
A heavy weight that presses upon my heart.
Her absence left a gaping hole.
In the chaos of life,
The silence screams with the pain of missing her.
No loving voice whispers 'Jaanjoni' anymore.
In the stillness, I wait to hear it again.

SIMPLE JOYS

Every morning, Arun sat on the balcony, sipping chai and watching the world stir awake. Children rushed to school, and a dog napped peacefully nearby.
His mother's gentle call brought him to the kitchen, where they made parathas, sharing laughter and warmth.
Later, he biked to the local bookstore, losing hours in pages he couldn't buy but loved to read.
Evenings by the lake with friends filled with jokes, dreams, and street food were his favorite.
Life was simple, but in its quiet rhythm, Arun found true joy.

OFFERING WHISPERS

A deep voice...
Sudden thoughts of that little heart.
Along with them, I was crossing the bridge...
Tiny Birds in the sky, with thick clouds
As if I along with them would reach That destined place.
Oh! that charming eyes, Could sense the sweetness of dreams.
Smells of earth, Lily-lotus and those little minds, The dream drives me back to that time...
Somewhere I find that little faces now Among the crowd, running around cities To make the Life.
Take me back to that place
A deep urge to breathe that air again.
A bucket full of memories, When vivid portraits hit my reticent mind.
I want to tell tales...
The Free Mind, When that dream alerts me
The dream of mine'.

FROM BLANK PAGES TO WRITTEN LIVES

We walked in shy, with dreams untold,
Pages blank, and hearts of gold.
The halls felt vast, the faces new,
A trembling voice, a timid "Who are you?"
Then lectures came, and stories spoke.
Of Austen's wit and Eliot's yoke.
From Shakespeare's stage to Keat's deep pain,
We learned to dance in sun and rain.
We stumbled on Milton, wrestled with Coleridge. Debated themes with trembling voice.
Late-night notes and coffee-stains.
Deadlines, dramas, and growing pains.
Semesters passed like turning leaves.
With memories tucked in literary sheaves.
We found our voice in poems and prose.
And friendships too, like blooming rose.
Now final years, with heavy heart,
Prepare to soon from here depart.
But in our veins, these walls shall stay.
As we turn life's next essay.
We came as seeds, unsure and small,
We leave as trees, who've braved it all.
With roots in books and sky-bound eyes,
We chase the sun, where our future lies.

MIDNIGHT GRATITUDE

Smelling pollen while lingering palm over the sleeping tulips...
Under the sky, embracing it's own beauty. Where and how answers the stars Glimmering it's radiance charm.
Here as to why a myctophile loves this peace
Time and night holding load on every shoulder, Solving patterns of stars gifting with directions. As to everyone's life be filled with constellations. Wouldn't have made it to this light But...
The night was there holding my hands.

KRISHNA - THE MELODY OF MY SOUL

In the hush of night, when stars appear,
I feel a murmur, soft and clear.
A flute is playing, far yet near-
Is it you, O Krishna dear?

With peacock feather, eyes so kind,
You dance upon my restless mind.
In chaos deep, I always find
Your calmness leaves the world behind.

On fields of Kurukshetra bold,
You stood with truth, so calm, so cold.
Yet in Vrindavan's tales of old,
Your laugh was worth more than gold.

You're not just God from myth or lore,
But a friend when life shuts the door.
In every heart, you gently pour
A love that asks for nothing more.

So when I fall or lose my way,
Your smile in dreams will light my day.
For even now, I softly pray-
"O Kanha, never drift away."

Snow of Deceit

You call yourself poet
While you cry for praise
Loving letters can never be wrong
You love language
Crumbled leafs dying in the snow
Snow for the show
Snow made of black bricks
Bricks of pride.
Fragile pride breaks, when Crows cry
Asked them to cry "together"
A symphony of vulnerability.

HIDDEN JEWELS

A sphere, phenomenal gyre,
You are born within us,
Yet, you fail to visualise your form.
In times when things fall apart.
A sudden hue of yours seems
To awaken our spirit.
Like a beam of light in a dark forest.
You reside in every human,
In different shapes and colours.
A lie of diversity, unfelt in you.
You are to us the 'hidden jewels'.
That leads us, that guides us
You reside in every human.
The hidden jewels of time,
You sparkle in the deepest of the ocean,
Simply, a shining star from heaven's motion.

-Ananya Goswami

HEY PAPA

Maybe in another life,
You will ruffle my hair.
Maybe in another life,
We will share our millions laughs.

Maybe in another life,
You will kiss my forehead.
Maybe in another life,
You will pull my cheeks.

Maybe in another life,
You will solve my puzzles.
Maybe in another life,
I will sleep on your chest.

Maybe in another life,
You will teach me science lessons.
Maybe in another life,
You will be beside me.

Maybe in another life,
I will hug you as much as I can.
Maybe in another life,
Your hand will be with my hand.

BEAUTY:

Beauty is the quality that pleases the heart and mind. It can be seen and felt through appearance, words, thoughts, or actions, creating sense of harmony and joy within ourselves. In our lives, a thing of beauty can evoke happiness while also bringing cheerfulness to the soul. Embracing one's own beauty comes from within, and accepting all kinds of beauty helps us rise above narrowness.
